Benjamin J. Wade

About the Conductor

New in his 20th season as the conductor/artistic director of the Susanville Symphony, Maurice Wade continues to seek for innovative and dynamic programs to thrill the audience.

"I live that with each season we look for ways to not only wow the audience, but to educate them as well. We set the bar higher, demand more than just the notes, and seek to emotionally transport the audience to each concert to a place they rarely visit."

It was about 20 years ago Benjamin Wade had a dream, one that would infuse culture and life to a small town town in northeastern California. To have been the ground up a symphony orchestra. Beginning with just 18 local musicians, many of whom are still there, and building on the musical network that local music teachers Dennis Roberts, Ray Craig, Carol Fontana and others built, the symphony was an instant success. Now the symphony has grown to over 50 musicians and a full fledged academy that offers hand, string, youth orchestra and advanced chamber ensemble classes to all who want to learn the joy of music.

Benjamin Wade, a gifted trumpet player, has performed with the NY Metropolitan Opera, the Indianapolis Symphony, the Knoxville Symphony as well as many other musical organizations. He has a B.A. from the University of Tennessee and a Master in Music (conducting) from the University of Nevada.

His compositions have been performed around the world and he continues to write music, both for the Susanville Symphony and other commissioned organizations.
